The interfaculty minor 'Art, Law and Policy Making' approaches arts and culture from the perspectives of art history and theory, sociology of art, cultural economics, anthropology of art, museum studies, art law and private international law. This minor gives students an insight into the interdisciplinary nature of the cultural field. From discussing the role of policy and politics in arts and culture, to the position of museums and their collections, to the legal aspects of the art trade and heritage protection, as well as restitution of cultural objects – students will gain an insight into the many forces that influence the cultural sector, cultural policy, cultural participation, museums, the art market and the protection of cultural heritage, which shape an important aspect of our everyday life.
